

The Scout 'Thanks Badge' through time

The purpose of the Thanks Badge is the means of expressing the appreciation of the Movement to those who are not Members, but who have been of service to Scouting.

Many of our original Scouting insignia and badges can be traced back to the era of early 20th century Britain and their norms of the day and this includes the evolution Scout Thanks Badge.

The Fleur-de-lys

The symbol was chosen by Robert Baden-Powell as it had been the arm-badge of those soldiers qualified as 'Scouts' (reconnaissance specialists) when BP served in the British Army. The classical description of this shape in Scouting literature connects the compass rose with the purpose of Scouting's principles - namely that Scouting gives one's life direction.

The Fylfot

Better known as the swastika it became stigmatized because of its iconic usage by Nazi Germany. The use of the swastika as a background (already being used by Rudyard Kipling the author of 'The Jungle Book') was chosen by Baden-Powell based purely on the sign's Indian meaning of 'good luck' or 'well being', which in turn was meant to bring 'good luck' to the person receiving the badge or medal.

The progression of the Thanks Badge

1908 – 1914

The original 1908 Thanks Badge.

1910 – 1935

The Thanks Medal of Merit

This was awarded for special service or kindness to Scouting.

The original medal depicted a swastika with the old shape fleur-de-lys on it. In 1914 it was changed to depict a swastika, but with the fleur-de-lys as we know it today (as seen on the right).

In 1935 the medal was redesigned removing the swastika and depicted only the fleur-de-lys.

The medal was also re-designated to become the 'Medal of Merit' and is still in use today.

1914 – 1935 In 1914 the Thanks Badge changed to depict the fleur-de-lys as we know it today.
1933 – 1939 When the Coloured Division of the Boy Scout Association was formed in 1933 they chose to be known as Pathfinders. To meet their requirements, a new Thanks Badge, a Pathfinder Badge on a swastika, was introduced in South Africa, to be used specifically by the Pathfinder Section of Scouting. The Pathfinder version was replaced later in 1939 by the start of World War 2.
1935 – 1955 In November 1935 a new design for the Scout Thanks Badge (and medal) were approved by Britain. The new badge was of a rectangular design with a fleur-de-lys centre. This was to replace the old swastika designs, due to several incidents being reported of people wearing the old badge being assaulted when abroad in Europe, due to the use of the swastika by the German Nazi Party.
1955 – to date By the mid 1950's another change was made, giving the Thanks Badge a round shape, which has remained as such to date.

Western Cape Heritage Team
2009

Back to Awards